RESEARCH

Public Health

Performed research in the area of public health law and the use of community mobilization and collaboration to achieve changes in public health policy. Identified effective strategies that could be used by community leaders to convey legal information to the public. Conducted community surveys of school breakfast and after school programs. Investigated consumer protection laws on junk food marketing and tobacco marketing to kids. Researched emerging legal issues around child obesity, health insurance, and access to healthcare for the poor. Researched legal strategies to support physical fitness and nutrition education requirements in public schools. Collected information in support of diabetes education, stroke, prostate cancer, high blood pressure and heart disease education in minority communities and distributed information to local community centers. Mapped liquor stores to assess the availability of alcohol in impoverished communities.

Urban Problems

Explored the nature of urban problems and violence, seeking to identify causes and solutions. Examined the causes of violence in urban areas and the effects they have on communities, schools, businesses and families. Explored the various solutions for alleviating crime, poverty, unemployment, and homelessness focusing on those amenable to the community. Researched community-oriented approaches to workforce development, job training, school dropout prevention, home ownership, crime reduction, and financial literacy. Investigated the role public schools, faith based institutions, small businesses, and community organizations play in solving urban problems and urban violence.
